

neat, plain little programme, giving all the needed and nothing more. It is not necessary the managers should make their programme a source of revenue to themselves at the expense of patrons' comfort. The business of managing theatre and of conducting an advertising pought to be separate enterprises.

"You are like the weather," said Jones to a young lady.

"That is rather a beautiful compliment, Jones," she replied. "The weather is variable, know."

"Yes," responded Jones, "perhaps it is. It always makes itself felt, you know."

enterprises and Americans being in charge. Just think, a place the size of Arequipa, of only 9,000 inhabitants, having a work-shop where steam locomotives, and cars are made of the most improved order, turning out on an average five cars a week. Arequipa is 7,900 feet above the sea level, and is

With these last remarks the gentleman left the porter, remarking that: "Mr. Jones was not even prepared at that moment for an encounter of a serious kind."

Bertie—Mr. De Garmo, is it hard to talk the way you do?
De Garmo—What do you mean, Bertie? I don't talk different from other people.
Bertie—Oh, you do. You can't fool me. Pa says you talk the worst twaddle of any man he ever heard.
